HITTING THE LINKS

Let Us See

When I find myself in times of trouble brother Larry's no use to me. Where will be an answer, let us see, let us see. I do a search on YouTube, which invariably turns up several different ways to do a particular thing. Recently I needed to fill in a less-than-full beard in a photo, so I searched for "Add Facial Hair in Photoshop" and got several different remedies. I watched three or four solutions, each taking a different approach, and ended up merging some of the settings from two videos to fill out the man's beard.

A great thing about YouTube is being able to adjust the playback speed faster or slower—found under Settings at the bottom right of the YouTube screen (green arrow below). Going faster helps me find the meat of what I'm looking for. If it's a technique I will sporadically use and may be apt to forget I take screen shots of important parts or settings to assemble in a Photoshop file that I can reference later—that way I don't have to re-watch 15 minutes of a video for the salient bits I'm looking for. I also copy the video's URL into the PS file just in case I want to reference it later.

I throw screen shots into a Photoshop document for quick reference later. I keep my collection in a folder titled "How To" on my computer desktop so it's right at hand.
