Properties of Light

APRIL SPEAKER

Roger Pruitt

Photography has been described as the manipulation of light and time. Join Roger Pruitt on April 18 as he draws from the NPC Principles of Photography Class to discuss the light side of photography.

Being able to describe the light is the first step in being able to control it, or knowing whether to shoot or wait until conditions improve. Learning the properties of light will help you walk away with the shot others are struggling to achieve. Roger will cover three properties of light that all photographers must understand to confidently light a subject correctly without guessing.

PARTING SHOT

BALTHAZAR KORAB (1926–2013)

*GENERAL MOTORS TECHNICAL CENTER,
WARREN, MICHIGAN, 1945; 1946-56.*

WATER TOWER DETAIL

Balthazar Korab (1926–2013) was a photographer based in Detroit, Michigan specializing in architectural, art and landscape photography.

Balthazar Korab was born in Budapest, Hungary, and migrated to France after fleeing from Hungary's communist government in 1949. At the École des beaux-arts in Paris, he completed a diploma of architecture in 1954. For a time, he was a journeyman under the direction of leading European architects, including Le Corbusier.

Korab immigrated to the United States in 1955 and Eero Saarinen employed him to photograph the architectural design process. The architectural community in Detroit embraced Korab's work, and many firms retained him to document their corporate building and private home projects. In 1994, President Bill Clinton presented a portfolio of Korab's photography to Árpád Göncz, the President of Hungary.

His legacy archive survives through Korab Image, operated by his son, Christian.
